ABSTRACT

The purpose of this study was to examine the relationship between intrinsic and extrinsic motivation in higher education. Specifically, the study aimed to investigate the factors that influence student achievement in English. The research design involved a quantitative approach, using surveys and statistical analysis. The results indicated that both intrinsic and extrinsic motivation significantly impact student achievement. Intrinsic motivation was found to be more strongly associated with academic performance than extrinsic motivation. These findings suggest that educators should focus on fostering a positive learning environment that encourages student curiosity and interest in the subject matter. Further research is needed to explore the long-term effects of motivation on academic success in higher education.
